

It would appear that with such a large percentage of the population registered on the Do Not Call list, elected officials would realize that their constituents are very happily in strong support of the Telephone Consumer Protection Act and do not want it altered.